

World Bank data from August 2008 indicate that poverty levels, as determined by the number of people who earn a bundle of goods worth less than $1.25 a day, have fallen dramatically in areas such as China and India but stayed constant in sub-Saharan Africa. Source: The World Bank Development Research Group.